A Critical Analysis of Public Policies on Education and LGBT Rights in Brazil

Mountian, I.

Institute of Development Studies (IDS) (2014)

- A clearly supported strategy is needed against homophobia and sexism in educational policies and the national curriculum.
- There is a need to articulate and strengthen the intersectionality between educational policies against homophobia with other public policies, such as poverty reduction, work, health and others.
- Long-term policies against homophobia should be developed.
- There is a need to acknowledge and develop strategies to tackle local resistance to policy implementation.
- Resources are required to support staff promoting equality (information, workshops, protection from abuse, permanent forums).

This report presents an analysis of public education policies in Brazil and considers where these policies intersect with programmes aimed at preventing and reducing discrimination and violence against LGBT people.
